What should the Pierce Transit of tomorrow look like?

Pierce Transit
has served Pierce County
for thirty years.
Help us plan for the next thirty.

Let's design our transit system to meet the challenges of the future.

In Pierce County, public transportation faces an uncertain future. Despite efforts to control costs, Pierce Transit was forced to reduce bus service 5% in July, 2009. And while everyone hopes the economy will rebound soon, we must be prepared for whatever the future may bring.

Help us make choices about priorities and efficiencies that will be necessary in these difficult economic times. You don't need to be a public transportation expert to help us design service options.

Join us! Learn about transit, share your concerns and ideas, and help design the system of tomorrow! If you can't attend the workshop in your area, you are welcome at any location.

Community Design Workshops

Join us to discuss:

-  Prioritizing service. The economic recession has shown us that we can't always have everything.
-  Where you'd like to see improvements and least like to see reductions. Destinations? Time of day? Frequency? This is your opportunity.
-  Regional connections. Travel beyond Pierce County is important to a growing number of transit riders.
